A City Building.

Flemingsburg voted to build a $5,000 building for engine house and Council chamber purposes. If Flemingsburg can afford to build a new city building it looks like Paris could afford to build one. The one now in use is almost a disgrace compared to our other public buildings. The old Christian church could be made an ideal city building.

A Remarkable Plea.

The new Rate law requires every common carrier to publish, file with the Interstate Commerce Commission, and in its ticket offices and stations copies of its schedules containing all its rates. Many of the railroad companies of the country have complied with this requirement, but the Pullman company has neither published, filed nor posted any schedule or tariff whatever. For its failure to do so, it pleads that it is not a common carrier, therefore, is not compelled to comply with the provision of the Rate law. It pleads that it is engaged in the hotel business, furnishing travelers on railways with lodging accommodations and meals.

The plea is certainly remarkable, and yet it has some basis in fact. The Pullman company does not pay railroad companies to draw its cars over their lines; on the contrary it is paid by the railroad companies so much per mile for use of its cars. Pullman cars are private cars, and are managed just as are all private car lines; and the reason they are rented, if this term may be used, by railroad companies, is that they increase travel over railroads, especially night travel. Still, these facts notwithstanding, it does not follow that the rates and tariffs of the Pullman company cannot be published under the requirements of the rate law, and the several railroad companies operating Pullman cars act as its agents. If the Pullman company's remarkable plea shall hold good, the Interstate Commerce Commission can then look to the several railroad companies to comply with the law.

Democratic Day Coming.

Railroad magnate Harriman may be "above the level" of the rest of us, but it is dollars to doughnuts that he is riding for a fall. His latest attempt to rule the destinies of the Illinois Central railroad, which is about the last of the independent railroads, will, if successful, lead to his undoing, for the public will only stand about so much concentration in the hands of one man and he is trying to overdo the thing. The magnates that control railroad combinations, the trust corporations, the express combine and others that charge "all the traffic will bear," will soon be feeling that life is hardly worth living when the long suffering people get through with them. There will be no confiscation, no socialism, which is un-American, but taxes will have to be paid by these corporations like other people pay on the value of their property and rates will be regulated so that surpluses will not pile up to be used for stock speculation, but there will be "equal rights to all and special privileges to none" in the Democratic days that are coming.

What Will the Cost Be?

The estimates for the Panama Canal for the next fiscal year have been prepared and will require $25,406,258, of which $9,309,906 is for labor, $1,385,000 for further equipment of the Panama railroad and the balance, nearly fifteen million, for construction material. As the pay of the laborers is $1 a day, the estimated amount will provide 30,000 laborers working 300 days in the year, but as the laborers will not average anything like 300 days' work in the year, the real number employed will be much greater. As most of the millions already expended have been for materials, the amount now called for for that purpose would seem to be far beyond the necessities of construction. Judging by the estimates, and taking ten years to complete the canal, the cost will far exceed the amount that the administration told us the Canal would cost.

As President Roosevelt has given up the work of making the "dirt fly" and is now about to let the building of the canal by contract, three will be a great incentive of fraud and grafting, so how much the canal will cost the people of the United States, under the erratic change of plans of Republican Administration, before it is completed is what no fellow can figure on. It is quite likely that after the contracts are let, there will be a disagreement with the contractors, involving prolonged and expensive litigation and the work will probably have to be completed by the army engineers. This is what the Republicans call "doing things."

Driving Women Into Matrimony.

The editor of a neighboring paper says he can tell from one look at a woman who wears a waist that buttons down her back if there was any one at home when she started away. The third button from the top is not buttoned if she dressed alone. The third button from the top is what is driving women into matrimony; they must have some one who will button the third button from the top.

Who They Are.

There are seven kinds of town killers and every town is afflicted with one or more of them, remarks the Enid Wave. First, those who go out of town to do their trading; second, those who are opposed to improvements; third, those who imagine they own the town; fourth, those who deride public spirited men; fifth, those who oppose movements not originated with themselves; sixth, those who oppose every movement that doesn't appear to benefit them; seventh, those who seek to injure the credit or reputation of their neighbor.

The Servant Question in Canada.

The Courier-Journal says: "The servant girl question has taken an odd shape in Canada. The Society of British Columbia demand the admission of Chinese 'for domestic servants only' at a reduced tax. They are willing for the men to regulate labor in field and shop, but they think they ought to control domestic affairs. The present tax on Chinamen entering the country is $500 per head. They demand that when they come in for domestic servants the tax be reduced to $100. With the reduced tax all Chinamen would, doubtless, enter for domestic servants, but might not confine themselves to that sort of work."

No Rest From Trust Exactions.

Arizona, which is entirely under the control of the Federal authorities, reports a lumber trust plundering her people. Yea, if we fly to the uttermost parts of the earth the trusts, under this Republican policy of tariff fostering, pursue us and even under the protection of the federal officials, appointed by President Roosevelt, the people find no rest from trust exactions.

Water Cures Flirt.

In accordance with a promise made by her, that the one of her five suitors who should propose to her in the quietest way would be accepted, Miss Myra Butler, beautiful girl of Warwick, R. I., is preparing her trousseau for her expected wedding to Charles Vernon Kearns, of Pawtucket. Although she has since refused to speak to Kearns or even to read his letters, her girl friends say she is only angry because he conquered her and that she loves him. Kearns says she will keep her promise and marry him. The other four suitors, Henry Detwiler, Enoch Saylor, Martin D. Rentz, and Clive Gordon, have been living in the hope that the young woman may yet change her mind and take one of them.

One day, when all five suitors were being entertained on the veranda of Miss Butler's home, by that charming young woman, one of them proposed that she give them each a chance to propose to her. She thought a moment and then made the declaration that the one who proposed in the most novel manner would be accepted. She gave them each a week, the campaign to close at the end of five weeks. Then followed the strange proposals.

Detwiler proposed 200 times. He proposed verbally and then sent written supplications. Wherever the girl turned she found love missives, under her plate at the table, in her purchases at the stores, pasted everywhere about the premises, and handed to her wherever she went, by Detwiler's messengers. Then, Saylor, who did not appear until Friday of his week, accosted her on the street and, kneeling before her, kissed her hand and announced his proposal in a loud voice, before a crowd of spectators. Miss Butler fled.

How Rentz proposed is a mystery. Neither he nor Miss Butler would tell. Gordon secured a huge phonograph and by means of this shouted his proposal at 2 a. m. in front of the Butler house.

It was a beautiful day in Kearns' week, when he asked the lady of his heart to go yachting with him. She accepted and they went sailing across the blue waters, in the best of spirits. Never a word did the man say of love. When they were far away from land he got up and went over to her. Miss Butler as sitting. Without a word he picked her up and threw her into the water. She could swim, and he sat down, lighted his pipe and said, "Miss Butler, I love you. Will you be my wife?" She sputtered some words of defiance and he smoked quietly on. Then he asked her again. She was giving out, her strokes became less vigorous and she breathed in quick agonizing gasps. Then she muttered some thing which Kearns took for "yes." He went to her assistance, lifted her tenderly into the boat and started back to land.

He was very solicitous during the return trip, and, although Miss Butler was scornfully silent, he ignored her attitude. She did not speak to him after the occurrence, but there is no doubt but that she loves him and that she will give herself to the man who has mastered her and who proposed in a novel manner.

Human Blood Marks.

A tale of horror was told by marks of human blood in the home of J. W. Williams, a well known merchant of Bac, Ky. He writes: "Twenty years ago I severe hemorrhages of the lungs, and was near death when I began taking Dr. King's New Discovery. It completely cured me and I have remained well ever since." It cures hemorrhages, Cronic coughs, settled colds and Bronchitis, and is the only known cure for weak lungs. Every bottle guaranteed by Oberdorfer, the druggist. 50c and $1. Trial bottle free.

ANOMOLOUS FACTS.

Prohibition seems to be making rapid progress, not only in Kentucky, but in other States. In the meantime the production and also the price of whisky has materially increased and the Kentucky distilleries are making preparations for the biggest run they have ever made.

Buy Back Old Home.

Robt. Metter has resold the Smedley place, near Hutchinson, which he recently purchased, to A. and B. D. Smedley, at handsome profit. The Smedley brothers longed to return to their old home, and were determined to get it back if money would buy it. They will move back to the farm March 1.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribe local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a tea-spoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address:

Dismissed All of Them.

Unprecedented in the history of the United States is the action of the President just now in dismissing in disgrace from the army an entire battalion of negro troops because of their failure to disclose the identity of some of their number who had been guilty of violence and murder. As evidence, however, of his intentions to be fair to the negro troops, the President has accompanied this action by an order which may amount to a court martial of a white army officer of high grade who was charged with having cast slurs upon the negro troops.

Large numbers of cavalry horses are being bought for the United States Government in all the great markets of the country, as many horses as are suitable in the daily supply being frequently taken for this use in Chicago. It is stated that army horses are costing more money now than they ever cost Uncle Sam before.

Another "Bill Nye" Englishman. Charles Francis Adams was escorting an English friend about Boston. They were viewing the different objects of attraction and finally came to Bunker Hill. They stood looking at the splendid monument, when Adams remarked:

"This is the place, sir, where Warren fell."

"Ah! I replied the Englishman, evidently not very familiar with American history. "Was he seriously hurt by his fall?"

Mr. Adams looked at his friend. "Hurt?" said he. "He was killed, sir."

"Ah, indeed," the Englishman replied, still eyeing the monument and commencing to compute its height in his own mind. "Well, I should think he might have been—falling so far."

How's This?

We offer One Hundred Dollars Reward for any case of catarrh that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. F. J. CHENEY & CO., Toledo, O.

We, the undersigned, have known F. J. Cheney for the last 15 years, and believe him perfectly honorable in all business transactions and financially able to carry out any obligations made by his firm.

Fortunate Missourians.

"When I was a druggist at Livonia, Mo.," writes T. J. Dwyer, now of Graysville, Mo., "three of my customers were permanently cured of consumption by Dr. King's New Discovery, and are well and strong today. One was trying to sell his property and move to Arizona, but after using New Discovery a short time he found it unnecessary to do so. I regard Dr. King's New Discovery as the most wonderful medicine in existence." Surest cough and cold cure and throat and lung healer. Guaranteed by Oberdorfer, the druggist. 50c and 1.00. The chicken is no longer regarded as a nuisance on the farm. The farmer knows that when hogs are 5 cents a pound chicks are from 10 to 12, and the corn it takes to lay a pound of fat on a chicken, and the pound of chicken will always sell for twice as much as the pound of hog, and when the modern successful farmer sees his chickens eating corn with the hogs he never drives them away.

In the Nursery.

Therewas a poor lady who hastened to the nursery, saying to her little daughter: "Minnie, what do you mean by shouting and screaming? Play quietly like Tommy. See he doesn't make a sound."

"Of course he doesn't," said the little girl. "That is our game. He is papa coming home late and I am you."

Postmaster Robbed.

G. W. Fouts, postmaster of Riverton, Ia., nearly lost his life and was robbed of all comfort, according to his letter, which says: "For 20 years I had chronic liver complaint, which led to such a severe case of jaundice that even my finger nails turned yellow; when my doctor prescribed Electric Bitters; which cured me and have kept me well for eleven years." Sure cure for biliousness, neuralgia, weakness and all stomach, liver kidney and bladder derangements. A wonderful tonic. At Oberdorfer's drug store. 50c cents.

In the Products of Bourbon Farms.

Quite a number of our best farmers make Ford & Co.'s hardware store their headquarters when in town, and if one will go to the rear of their large store-room you would almost imagine you were at a country fair. The display of products of the farm shows conclusively that Bourbon county leads the lists when it comes to agricultural products of every kind. You will find on exhibition there the following:

A squash grown by Doug Thomas that measures 34 inches in length and weighs 44 pounds.

An old fashioned pumpkin, grown by Thomas Henry Clay, and big enough to be hauled in a wheelbarrow, weighs 57 pounds.

A kershaw, grown by J. Harry Holt, is 32 inches long and tips the beam at 42 pounds.

The collection also embraces other varieties of garden squash, potatoes, field corn and samples of all grades of white burley tobacco.

Another curiosity is a stalk of tobacco that measures eight feet and ten inches in height.

At the Bluegrass Fair, at Lexington, John Clay, a well known Bourbon county farmer, took first premium on a sixty-five pound watermelon.

POE IN THE CAPITAL

WHEN THE POET OF WOE SOUGHT
A GOVERNMENT POSITION.

The Pathos and Earnestness of His Quest, His Miserable Destitution and His Futile Chase of the Public Service Will-o'-the-Wisp.

Edgar Allan Poe, the master singer of sorrow, the world famous author of "The Raven," not only lived in Washington a number of weeks, but came near becoming a government clerk and residing in the national capital permanently, says Elizabeth Ellcott Poe in the Washington Post.

Destiny prevented Poe from obtaining a government post, however. Burns got into the excise, Charles Lamb had a desk in the Indian house, writing his masterly essays "after hours;" Hawthorne enjoyed a snug berth in the consular service, but there was no easy government billet for Edgar Allan Poe. The suggestion that there might be came from Frederick William Thomas, a literary friend of the poet, himself an officeholder under President Tyler, and deeply impressed with the light duties of government service.

The year was 1841, and in the Poe calendar this was the year when the Poe dream child, a Poe magazine, was born. The idea itself was born without ways and means to protect it from the world or keep it in the world. The personal exchequer was low and editors dilatory with payments. Where was the money to come from for even the initial number? The prospect of steady, light remuneration came at the psychological moment. The bubble of hope grew, beautiful with rainbow hues, lived a moment, then, like other Poe bubbles, burst and disappeared.

The story of its brief hour can be best told in extracts from the correspondence between Poe and Thomas. On March 7, 1841, Thomas wrote a chatty note to Poe on Washington affairs generally and his own literary ambitions particularly and spoke of a book he was working on.

"How would you like," he asked, "to be an officeholder here at $150 monthly, payable by Uncle Sam, who, slack as he may be to his general creditors, pays his officeholders with due punctuality? How would you like it?" Then Thomas touched up the picture with a humorous description of the sinecure post a government clerk held in those days. "The work is by no means hard. You stroll to the office a little after 9, take your own leisure through the day and then stroll home after 2 to dinner and do not return that day. If after dinner you have anything to do, it is an agreeable relaxation from the monstrous laziness of the day. You have everything in the writing line on your desk, and if you choose to lubricate in the literary way, why, you can. You can follow literature as well here as where you are, and think of the money to be made by it."

Poe, in his miserable destitution, seized on this straw of hope with avidity. To be released from pecuniary care, to serve his beloved art in peace—what a haven it promised! Besides Thomas' persuasions there were other reasons why the scheme seemed possible. As an adopted son of Virginia, a personal acquaintance of President Tyler and the literary protege of Postmaster General John P. Kennedy his chances appeared great. In addition to these he was a descendant of men who had fought in the Revolution and again in the war of 1812, and his own grandfather, General David Poe, gave his entire fortune to the cause of liberty, and surely that should have given the genuine grandson a claim to the favors of the state.

Eagerly he penned his reply. Very characteristic it was, too, of the man. Pathetic in the betrayal of the present sufferings, of which pride would not allow full revelation—how the pertinient, earnest words hold a power to dim the eyes that read them today!

"Would to God," he writes, "I could do as you have done. Do you seriously think an application to Tyler would have a good result? My claims, to be sure, are very few. I am a Virginian—at least I call myself one—for I have resided all the years of my life except the last few in Richmond. My political principles have always been as nearly as may be with the existing administration, and I battled with right good will for Harrison when opportunity offered. With Mr. Tyler I have personal acquaintance, although this he may have forgotten. For the rest, I am a literary man, and see a disposition in the government to cherish letters. Have I any chance?"

The earnestness of this reply evidently frightened Thomas. To him without doubt it was an idle suggestion, inspired somewhat by sympathy for Poe and gratitude for literary aid given him. The next letter shows the change of tenor. It is cautious and noncommittal, diplomatic and intangible. In this pretty phrase he begins:

"I trust, my dear friend, you can obtain an appointment. President Tyler I have not seen, although I called to see his sons, but they were not in. Couldn't you slip on yourself and see the president? But perhaps your application had better be made through some one who has influence with the executive. I have heard you say John P. Kennedy had regard for you and will be glad to serve you. Would he not?"

This letter chilled the poet's hopes. Still he does not give up the idea, for is not John P. Kennedy one of the few true friends fate has given him? It will be remembered that it was Kennedy who had obtained for him the post of editor of the Southern Literary Messenger and who helped him with money and advice through many a dark hour. All the advantages of a personal visit presented themselves,

THE TELEGRAPH.

Opposition and Rebuttal With White Morse Had to Contend.

The Morse telegraph invention languished for years in the hands of a starving inventor because capitalists were indifferent or incapable of appreciating its merits.

It was several years before congress voted an appropriation to allow its inventor to make a practical test of it and burlesque bills were offered to provide means for communicating with the man in the moon.

"He's a very good, but shiftless painter, if he would only stick to his job," some one said of Morse. "The idea of telling by a little streak of lightning what a body is saying at the other end of a wire!"

His instrument, it was said, was a very well as a mantel ornament or a mistress to call her maid, but the wires couldn't cross rivers, oceans and deserts.

Even after the line was up between Washington and Baltimore and Silas Wright sent a dispatch to the Democratic convention at Baltimore declining its nomination of him to the vice presidency, it was not accepted as true until a committee went to Washington and returned with the confirmation of the report.

The Federal Building.

Maj. Brackett, the gentleman here a few days ago to inspect the sites for our new Federal building, stated to one of our citizens that it would probably be two years before the building could be built as the appropriations run short, and there was now only $20,000 on hand for the Paris building, when $40,000 was appropriated. This is the case of all the new Kentucky buildings ordered by the last Congress. He also stated that if a site was selected now, nothing could be done but to build the foundation with the money on hand, and then wait until the next Congress made additional appropriation, and that if a site was selected now where a house was standing the Government would rent it out for two years.

Corset Say Turned the Bullet.

Miss Mary Little, one of Richmond's prettiest young women, was shot and seriously wounded Friday. Miss Little, with Mrs. John R. Gibson, was driving on West Main street, in Richmond, and when in front of the home of Judge A. R. Burnam the crack of a pistol was heard. Miss Little fell into the arms of Mrs. Gibson, exclaiming: "I am shot!" Mrs. Gibson drove rapidly to the Glyndon Hotel, where Miss Little, with her mother, lives. A physician found that the young lady was wounded in the left side just under the heart. The wound is not necessarily fatal. Had it not been for a corset stay which turned the course of the ball, she would have been fatally wounded. It is the opinion of the officials that Miss Little was the victim of some boy shooting at birds.

Rare Presence of Mind.

Mrs. Harry Huesman, of Dayton, Ky., not only equalled but surpassed, Saturday afternoon, the heroic feats of eminent surgeons in taking instant and radical action to save life. For Mrs. Huesman had no instrument of any kind, but with her hand performed the operation which undoubtedly saved her husband from death by strangulation.

Mr. and Mrs. Huesman were returning from Cincinnati on a street car when Mr. Huesman was seized with a fit of coughing which became alarming in its intensity. His face was already becoming purple and black from his violent efforts when Mrs. Huesman thrust her hand into his mouth and removed with her finger a clot of blood which had lodged in his throat and was completely stopping up the windpipe and air passages.

Mr. Huesman was carried unconscious into a drugstore in Dayton and being revived with restoratives was taken home. Saturday night he was reported much better.

Most women would have fainted under such circumstances.

Our Washington Letter.

BY EARL W. MAYO.

At the Eleventh Hour

BY BEATRICE STURGES

WASHINGTON, Nov. 14.—When Senator-elect Beckham of Kentucky arrives, Senator Burkett of Nebraska will lose the distinction of being the youngest member of the upper house of Congress. Senator Beckham, who defeated Senator McCreary at the primaries, is 37 years old, a few months younger than the Nebraskan. He has had a remarkable career in politics, having been nominated for the State Legislature the day he was 21, and becoming speaker of the House at 28. The following year he was named for lieutenant governor with the ill-fated Goebel, and when the latter was assassinated, became governor. He was elected governor in his own right later. The Southern contingent in official life are looking forward to the arrival of the new Senator with delight.

President Roosevelt is off to view the work on the Panama canal. His trip is unique in the history of the United States, for no President before ever put foot on foreign soil.

His journey undoubtedly will go far toward clearing up all the mystery that shrouds the conflicting debate for and against the work, and it will do more.

The President's interest in the big waterway will stimulate the growing sentiment at home for the vigorous development of the rivers and harbors of the nation.

This question in importance is gradually pushing the tariff from first place.

Commercial and agricultural interests are gradually beginning to realize that if transportation rates are to be reduced to the lowest possible level, the rivers of the country must be made navigable for steamers and barges.

With water competition, the railroad tariffs would be sealed sharply, but not even the railroads fear loss of revenue, for the stimulation to commerce would be so great that the increased volume of traffic would make up fully for the loss of higher carrying charges.

The National Rivers and Harbors Congress at its convention here December 6 and 7 will urge the government the absolute necessity for an increase to $50,000,000 in the annual appropriation to carry on the work of improving the waterways.

The movement is a non-partisan and non-political one, and the convention will welcome delegates from organizations or localities anywhere in the United States.

Truly, it must be seen if it is what you call all right," she protested, and the girl rose and walked to the mirror.

She was wearing a long, loose gown of yellow silk, and her nut brown hair was caught up loosely on her head.

Marie stepped in front of her for a moment, did a little adjusting and patting this way and that, and then stepped back with voluble expressions of admiration.

The girl looked into the glass as if in a dream, and then her heart throbbed painfully. She had put off the full realization of what she was about to do and lived in a vague hope that something would happen to stop it, but now as she looked in the mirror and saw herself at last enveloped in the white mist of a wedding veil the bitter truth came home. The bridal symbol, so sweet and lovely in itself, became suddenly hateful to her, for in all its frailty it brought to her the stern realization that the next day at noon in St. John's church she, Lucy Rutherford, was to be married to a man she did not love.

How different, oh, how different it might have been!

She tore off the veil and threw herself on the bed in a passion of tears.

She never would do it, she told herself over and over; she never could do it!

What did she care if Marie did see?

The whole world might see! It could see tomorrow, and they all could have their presents back—she didn't care.

It didn't make any difference what her stepmother said or did or threatened—she could marry him herself.

But, as for Lucy, she simply hated Hugh Goring all at once, and she never wanted to see him again.

She sat up presently and bathed her eyes in the water the discreet Marie brought to her and felt better.

Then as the maid turned again to her packing Lucy thought miserably of a certain night six months ago when she had quarreled so bitterly with Ralph Anderson and he had left her presence without one backward look and a very vicious slam of the door.

Oh, how foolish and trivial a lover's quarrel seems when six months have gone by!

Lucy knew that if she and Ralph once looked into each other's eyes again it must and would be all right once more.

But how was this to happen?

In the heat and suddenness of his wrath Ralph had rushed away to the vague and indefinable wilds of Texas, and Lucy never knew whether he received that little note she sent him the morning after their quarrel.

She had said only: "Dear Ralph—if you are sorry, I am too, Lucy."

Anyhow he never replied, and maybe by this time he was already in love with some horse riding girl in Texas, while she was supposed to be making her last joyful preparations for marrying another man.

"Oh, well," she had said to herself, "a girl has to do something!"

She rose and went over to the desk again, where from a secret hiding place she drew a photograph—a snapshot of an athletic young man in tunic flannels, with a racket in his hand and a bright smile on his face.

Her eyes filled with tears as she kissed it and murmured, "My sweetheart, I shall always love you."

While her lips still pressed the picture a sharp ring startled her.

"You answer it, Marie. It's probably the caterer or somebody asking about tomorrow. Tell them Mrs. Rutherford is out and to call up in the morning."

The surprised maid, knowing well that Mrs. Rutherford was in, stepped out into the hall to answer the telephone.

In a moment she returned.

"It was for you, mademoiselle—a gentleman who insisted—so I have turned ze switch."

Lucy sat down again at the desk and took up the receiver.

"Yes, this is Miss Rutherford."

The voice at the other end of the wire was strangely familiar. It made her cheeks burn, her heart throb and her eyes shine. She almost dropped the receiver.

"Why, Ralph!" she exclaimed.

Again the voice spoke rapidly.

"Yes," she replied, "it is a little late for a call."

"What's that? Wanted to answer my note? Well, you've had lots of time to do it in."

"Oh, just received it today? I wrote it six months ago."

"I don't think much of the way they take care of mail at your club, but—"

"Well, I hope it's all right now; but, you see—well, it's kind of hard to explain things over a telephone.

"Tomorrow? I'm afraid I'll be busy

"What makes my voice sound so queer? Oh, I don't know. I meant that I had an engagement for tomorrow—until a little while ago. By the way, you didn't say what your answer to the note was."

"Really? And you did think of me while you were gone? And you still care?"

"I should think my note told you that. Of course I do. I never stopped."

"Oh," faintly, "you heard just now about tomorrow? Well, I'm not, I'm not. I made up my mind ten minutes before you called up, and when the bell rang I was—I'll tell you when I see you."

"Right away? Why, it's after 10 o'clock."

"Any chances? What on earth do you mean?"

"Ralph! I never heard of such a thing!"

"Yes, I suppose I could. Of course I'd bring Marie. You're sure it's the only way?"

"Yes, the bishop's sure to be at home."

"All right, then—in half an hour, when we see the carriage turn in front of the house."

"Yes, sweetheart. I do, I do! And I don't care if central does hear."

The receiver was hung up with a rush. Miss Rutherford flew to the door after the wildly curious Marie, who had been listening outside in the hall to every word, and pulled her in.

"Hurry, hurry, Marie! Just the bag, never mind the trunk. That can wait. Where's my brown suit?"

"But, mademoiselle!"

"That's all right—you're coming too. Here! Wait till I write a note to Mrs. Rutherford. It's too bad for her to miss the show, but she will probably console Mr. Goring without any trouble."

She looked around the room and then at the bag where Marie had stowed everything necessary. From the window she saw a large carriage slowly approaching.

"Marie, Marie!" she exclaimed. "Put this in that big box and bring it along." In her eagerness she lifted the dainty mass of white satin and lace and the filmy veil. The maid opened her lips to protest and then tied up the package.

"Goodness!" exclaimed Lucy as they started down the stairs. "Did you think I could get married without my wedding dress?"

Outside in the carriage Ralph was impatiently waiting.

Carlyle's Doggedness.

Carlyle's dogged Scotch unsympathetic persistency in measuring everything by his own ideas was illustrated by a story which Huxley told of their mutual relations. Carlyle and he were for long good friends, but had a serious difference on the evolution question in the early stages of the controversy. Their personal intercourse ceased in consequence. After an interval of many years Huxley happened to see the Scotchman crossing the street in London and, thinking that by-gones might be by-gones, went up to him and spoke to him. Carlyle did not at first recognize him, but when he had made out who it was he at once said with his Scotch twang as though he were continuing the last conversation of years ago: "You're Huxley, are you? You're the man that's trying to persuade us all that we're the children of apes, while I am saying that the great thing we're really got to do is to make ourselves as much unlike apes as possible." Huxley, who had hoped that the weather or politics might have been admitted for the sake of peace, soon found that the best thing he could do was to retreat and return to their tacit agreement to differ.

They Needed the Moon.

In a certain New England town there is a medical society which is of some sixty years' standing and has the custom of meeting on the Thursday before the full of the moon. Recently some of the younger members tried to change the time of meeting to the third Wednesday of every month.

Three of the oldest members rose up and protested. They gave the reason for the peculiar arrangement. "When this association was formed," said one of them, "there were no electric lights and good roads the way there are now. The society took in the whole county and it was often a difficult matter for the doctors who lived in the country to drive home after nightfall. So we called the moon to our aid and set the date for the Thursday before the full of the moon. It is bright moonlight at a seasonable hour then, and the doctors could see their way home."

"The surprised maid, knowing well that Mrs. Rutherford was in, stepped out into the hall to answer the telephone. In a moment she returned.

"It was for you, mademoiselle—a gentleman who insisted—so I have turned ze switch."

Lucy sat down again at the desk and took up the receiver.

"Yes, this is Miss Rutherford." The voice at the other end of the wire was strangely familiar. It made her cheeks burn, her heart throb and her eyes shine. She almost dropped the receiver.

"Why, Ralph!" she exclaimed. Again the voice spoke rapidly.

For Thin Babies

Fat is of great account to a baby; that is why babies are fat. If your baby is scrawny, Scott's Emulsion is what he wants. The healthy baby stores as fat what it does not need immediately for bone and muscle. Fat babies are happy; they do not cry; they are rich; their fat is laid up for time of need. They are happy because they are comfortable. The fat surrounds their little nerves and cushions them. When they are scrawny those nerves are hurt at every ungentle touch. They delight in Scott's Emulsion. It is as sweet as wholesome to them.

Injunction Against Scott's County Attorney.

R. E. Roberts, of Georgetown, was elected without opposition to fill out the unexpired term of County Attorney T. A. Gaines, deceased. The present acting County Attorney of Scott, Jas. B. Finnell, a Republican, has secured a temporary injunction against Chairman Warring, of the Election Commission, to prevent a certificate of election being granted to Attorney Roberts on the ground that his appointment to the vacancy extended to the regular election of 1907. The injunction proceedings will be brought before Circuit Judge Stout for decision on November 15, at Versailles.

* The * Samaritans

By C. B. LEWIS

Miss Duella Mims, as her cards read, was an elocutionist and quite willing to help others over the same road for pay. So long as her ambition was kept within bounds and her prices were not too steep her native town of 5,000 inhabitants supplied a fair number of pupils, and the local press now and then referred to her in a way that was pleasing.

One unfortunate day Miss Mims decided that elocution such as hers should have no limits. The village boy who fell into the frog pond decided that if it was good for him it ought to be good for the whole United States. Miss Mims reasoned after the same fashion. She collected her bills, packed her trunk and set out for the metropolis, and never was a young woman more sanguine.

In a week she was surprised. In a month she was tired. In two months she had decided to drop elocution and look for a place as a typist and stenographer. Her mind was fully made up on this point, and yet she could not let go of elocution with a bang. She must part from it by degrees and make the parting less painful.

Miss Mims sat at the open window of her boarding house and dallied with elocution. In her well modulated voice she went over three or four of her choicest gems and then brought out "The Wanderer."

She had always made a hit in this. It was about a lovely girl who left her village home for a great city, and after using up all her money and pawning everything that her uncle would advance on her committed suicide, and the landlady found her dead when she went in to collect her week's rent in advance.

In elocuting this pathetic appeal Miss Mims had to simulate discouragement, sorrow, grief, appeal, resignation and several other things calculated to arouse human interest, and she had an audience without knowing it.

On the floor above was a young man who had been in the boarding house almost as long as she had, but they had not been introduced and had taken very little interest in each other. He was the audience on this night. Miss Mims' voice floated up to him, and he listened and became interested. Gradually he found his sympathies aroused. From what he could make out she was clean discouraged and ready for the deadly fumes of charcoal. She was even hungry for food at that moment, and there was no one in the great city to whom she could turn.

The young man was deeply affected. Here was a case right under his nose where sympathy and cash were required, and only that evening he had dodged the landlady when he came in. He was perturbed and upset for a few minutes, but finally reasoned it out that if the poor girl stuck to her programme and died it would save her being disappointed in love in the future.

When a long silence had followed her tearful appeal to heaven he brought out a manuscript and began to read aloud. He was no elocutionist. He might have been one had he not become a dramatist at an early age. The manuscript in his hands was a play written by himself. It is needless to give it a name, but it may be said to have been pathetic. It had a hero, and the hero went through trouble enough to swamp canal boat within five miles of Troy. He kept hoping and hoping, but it was no use. As soon as he came in sight of a good thing it vanished. He hung on and hung on until the beef trust made its last raise, and then he starved to death with the same dignity that he had lived.

What the dramatist was reading was the soliloquy of the hero when he had abandoned all hope and decided that since pie was no longer for him. The reverie of the elocutionist below was broken by his reading and raving. She listened, and tears of pity came to her eyes. She had thought the world was harsh to her, but here was a worse case than hers. She hadn't gone hungry yet, but here was a young man literally starving to death. She had heard him say that even the mice had abandoned his room and that, unable to find another morsel of food, the cricket no longer sang for him.

Miss Mims did what a practical young woman should do under the circumstances. The hour was not late, and she put on her hat and went downstairs and hunted up a delicatessen store and bought some smoked tongue and crackers. These would keep the spark of life in the young man over night, and next day things might turn for the better with him.

When the dramatist had concluded reading his hero's soliloquy—it was the millionth reading—his thoughts turned once more to the young woman below. He still had a couple of dollars left and he could not see her die for want of sustenance. In handing in the sustenance he would also hand in his sympathies and encouragement. If he found her obstinately determined to die he might even promise her a leading part in his comedy drama when it was finally put on the road.

He did the only sensible thing he had done since he spelled down a country school and got the idea therefrom that he was born for a dramatist. He put on his hat and went down and went to a saloon. He bought a bottle of beer and from the remains of the free lunch he gathered up some cheese and pretzels. Beer, cheese and pretzels, as he had read in a medical magazine, will keep a young woman alive for a whole week after she has determined to die.

The two Samaritans did not happen to meet at the door of the boarding house or on the stairs. They went to their rooms for a moment and then emerged on the errand of mercy. They met in the lower hall. The dramatist was the first to speak.

"My dear Miss Mims—you see I have heard your name," he began—"I have learned quite by accident that you are in a bit of trouble and need a friend. I have here some beer and cheese and pretzels, and if you could manage to make them do for a lunch this evening we will talk matters over in the morning."

"You—you are also in trouble, I learn," she stammered in reply. "I have some smoked tongue and crackers here, and if you can get along with them this evening—"

"My dear Miss Mims"—

"My dear Mr. Davis"—

"You surely don't think I'm starv-ing?"

"And you can't think I have fasted all day?"

They sat down on the stairs and compared notes and soon got at the right of things and then sat down on the window seat at the end of the hall and formed the two lunches into a trust. As they ate and drank they learned each other's history. When they had finished she asked:

"How long have you been trying to place your play before the public?"

"Five years," he sighed. "How long have you been trying to get the people of this town to elocate?"

"Two months," and she sighed as well.

"Miss Mims," said the dramatist as he sought to take her hand, "I have known you but a brief half hour, but during that time—"

"Yes?"

Then the landlady appeared and said that altogether too much gas was being used throughout the house and it must be cut off in the halls; also that it was against the rules of the house to leave cracker crumbs around.

Next morning Miss Mims got a place with a hardware firm, and two days later Mr. Davis was seen bareheaded and with a pencil over his ear in front of a shoe store where they sold manufacturers' samples only—every pair warranted as represented or money refunded. The elocution, the dramatic, the sentimental, were there, and the landlady is expecting an announcement any evening.

Mixed Metaphors.

A minister said to his congregation, "Brethren, the muddy pool of politics was the rock on which I split."

An orator is credited with a peroration in which he spoke of "all ranks from the queen sitting on her throne to the cottager sitting on his cottage."

"My client acted boldly," said the counselor. "He saw the storm brewing in the distance, but he was not dismayed. He took the bull by the horns and had him indicted for perjury."

A Hindoo journalist, commenting on a political disturbance, said, "We cannot, from a distance, realize the intensity of the crisis, but it is a certain thing that many crowned heads must be trembling in their shoes."

An old negro woman whose needs were supplied by friends never failed to express her gratitude in original language: "You is powerful good to a pore ole 'oman like me, wid one foot in de grave an' de other a cryin' out 'Lawd, how long, how long?'

No one could imagine what a speaker meant when he said, "Biddy, biddy" and then stopped and after a moment of confusion said, "Diddy, biddy," and then, with a scarlet face and coldly perspiring brow, gasped out, "Diddy, biddy, biddy, biddy doo?" Then he had to sit down and rest awhile before he could say, "Did he bid adieu?"—Christian Register.

The Shah and the Asparagus.

When Muzaffar-ed-Din, shah of Persia, paid his first visit to England he was the guest of King Edward VII, then prince of Wales. On the evening of his arrival a banquet was held at the palace, and on the menu was asparagus. As it happened, the shah had never heard of, much less tasted, asparagus till that evening. When the dish was brought on he helped himself to half of it, picked each stalk up in his fingers, nibbled gingerly at the head and then threw the stalk on the carpet. To have let it remain on his plate would have been a breach of Persian etiquette. All eyes turned to the Prince of Wales. What was he going to do? The prince, tactful as ever, glanced at those about him, then at his plate; then he picked up stalk after stalk, ate what he wanted and threw the balance on the carpet behind his chair. A moment later thirty people in that room were eating asparagus in Persian fashion, and the attendants, who are trained to look more serious than ever on such occasions, never moved a muscle.—Black and White.

A Starveling Greyhound.

One rarely hears of a stray dog found practically starving in the streets of a city rising to fame and bringing fortune to its benefactor. Such, however, is the history of the celebrated dog Brigadier, which many years ago, after being hustled about the streets of Manchester, found a sympathetic friend in the late Mr. Foulkes of that city. Finding the dog in the streets homeless, Mr. Foulkes took it home, and with it, after careful training, succeeded in winning the Waterloo cup. With the money thus won Mr. Foulkes purchased a hotel at Withington, a suburb of Manchester, which he renamed the Waterloo hotel. In a quiet spot of the hotel grounds stands a tombstone erected to the dog's memory.—London Graphic.

"An' as true as I tell you, doctor dear,
I'm feelin' finer than ever I've been!"

Huge Task.

It was a huge task to undertake the cure of such a bad case of kidney disease, as that of C. F. Collier, of Cherokee, Iowa, but Electric Bitters did it. He writes: "My kidneys were so far gone, I could not sit on a chair without a cushion; and suffered from dreadful backache, headache and depression. In Electric Bitters, however, I found a cure, and by them was restored to perfect health. I recommend this great tonic medicine to all with weak kidneys, liver or stomach." Coming Events Cast Shadows.

"Clear the stage. Not a particle of your house stuff is needed. We carry two car loads of scenery, which includes everything." This is the order given by the advance agent of "When Knighthood Was in Flower" with Anna Day as "Mary Tudor," which will be given in all its original splendor at the Grand on Friday, November 23.

This certainly portends good. When a play with five acts of elaborate stage settings can afford to issue the above, the scenic part is surely O. K. and the production, under the direction of Mr. Ernest Shipman is a guarantee that everything else will be in proportion.

Sale will be made subject to survey and upon the following

TERMS: $1,000 cash at day of sale, when deed will be delivered. Balance in three equal installments: 1st installment due March 1, 1907; 2d installment March 1, 1908; 3d installment March 1, 1909. The last two installments to bear 6 per cent interest from March 1, 1907. Usual lien retained to secure deferred payments.

The couple then appeared at the residence of Elder Carey E. Morgan to have him tie the knot, but Mr. Morgan refused on account of the youthful face of the would-be bride. The couple then proceeded to Lexington, where they were married by "Squire Abner Oldham. It now turns out that the bride is only fifteen years old and that she had run away from her home, at Danville, dressed in her mother's clothes. It is now alleged that the above order is a forgery.
